

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Breakthrough order on BoMills home market

The Swedish company BoMill AB have received their first commercial orders of their grain sorting technique, TriQ, to its domestic market. The customer is an organic cereal farm named Slätte Gård.

The TriQ technology can be used to sort durum wheat, soft wheat and malting barley on Fusarium, Protein and Vitreousness, with a speed of 25000 kernels per second. This makes the TriQ very profitable for businesses within grain handling and milling.

Karin Wehlin, CEO, says “We see this as an important breakthrough into our market. Our patented technique, sorting each individual kernel by looking at its chemical structure and composition shows an advantage compared to the existing solutions available on the market today.”

In order to meet the global market demand BoMill has also strengthened its organization in technical support.

About Slätte Gård

Slätte gård is one of Sweden's largest organic cereal farms with a cultivated area of approximately 1200 hectares. Running an organic cultivation of large areas require new solutions for better economy and more efficient production.

That is why Slätte Gård, as the first farm in northern Europe, invests in the BoMill TriQ technique in order to upgrade the wheat harvest by quality single kernel sorting

A strong feature of Slätte Gård's business is that it constantly must be in an expansive phase and this investment strengthens Slätte Gård position as one of Sweden's most environmentally oriented farms. For more information please visit <http://www.ekovax.se/slattegard.html>.
